FROM THE BOOK BY DR. JEFF CHHEUY

Your Story in the Book

For Myla, from your husband

The book is finally done, love. Vacation Rentals That Pay You goes to Amazon this month — and you should know that you're not just in it. You're the best deal in it, and I say so on the page: "The best first deal in my family wasn't mine. It belongs to my wife and business partner, Myla."

You're in more chapters than anyone else — Oak Hill shows up wherever the book needs proof, because your deal has everything: the market call, the contractor disaster, the comeback, the taxes, the refi, the 4.95 stars. Before the world reads it, I want you to see every place you appear and be completely happy with it. Anything you want changed comes out, no discussion needed.

Your biggest passages, word for word

1. Chapter 3 — where readers meet you:

> The best first deal in my family wasn't mine. It belongs to my wife and business partner, Myla.
> Her first cabin cost $103K, less than a third of what my $355K Joshua Tree house cost, and it grossed $150K over its first two years, nearly the same money. And in her best month it beat Joshua Tree outright: $10,195 against the roughly $6,700 a month that house averaged. … Luck had nothing to do with that result, and neither did genius. It came from order.

2. Chapter 8 — your full deal, the book's main case study:

> My wife Myla bought a rural home in Oak Hill, WV, and her deal shows every piece of this chapter working together … It also shows what happens when almost everything goes wrong first.
> Purchase price: $103,000, paid in cash, in partnership with her aunt. Renovation: about $70,000. Furniture and setup: about $30,000.
> That renovation number is bigger than it should have been. The contractors botched roughly 90 days of work, and in the end Myla, our friends, and I finished the house ourselves. … I'm telling you this on purpose, because the deal still worked.
> The home appraised at about $240,000 after the reno, more than double what she paid. Over her first two years it grossed $150,000 … her best single month was $10,195. … a 4.95-star rating across 70+ stays.

The same chapter tells your tax story (full-time W2, material participation, the cost segregation study on roughly $100K of reno and furnishings — no salary figures, no return details) and your equity story (cash purchase, $240K appraisal, refi at 75–80%, most of your money back inside two years — the book says plainly I don't remember the exact loan figure, and it never prints one).

3. Chapter 14 — the story of us before systems:

> Later, Myla and I decided to self-manage. She was my girlfriend then (she's my wife now), and somehow every guest message found its way to her phone. We were slow to answer. Questions sat there while we were both at work, and the guilt of an unanswered inbox followed us everywhere. It was stressful in a way the > properties themselves never were, and it stayed stressful until we quit trying to be the system and built a real one.

4. Chapter 16 — the refi and what it bought:

> I don't remember the exact loan figure. What I do remember is what the wire did. It repaid her aunt, and it put the majority of Myla's own cash back in her hands. … The cabin that ate four months of Myla's life ended up funding her next deal.

(The book says your recovered capital funded your second property, in Tennessee — that's the only thing it says about it.)

5. Chapter 17 — your reviews, held up as the standard:

> Myla treated reviews like a heat map. Every negative comment became a task. A guest said the shower pressure was weak? Plumber out within the week. … That obsession is why she hit 4.95 stars.

6. Chapter 18 — the community scoreboard:

> Myla: the $103K cash cabin in Oak Hill, $150K gross in its first two years, most of her capital back at the refi. The deal that convinced our own family the math was real.

The smaller mentions

About twenty more, all pointing back to the stories above: your market call ("a mediocre house in a great market…"), your one-cleaner-one-VA-one-app operation ("One cleaner, one VA, and one app can run a 4.95-star operation from anywhere. Myla's does."), the sleeping-capacity chapter (your best month wasn't the couch's doing), the design chapter, the "Myla isn't managing a property, she's managing a system" line, the exit-math example run on a cabin "like yours," and the Conclusion: "You've met them all now. Myla and her $103K cabin…"

What the book does NOT include

Your last name, your photo, your employer, your salary, any tax return numbers, the exact refinance loan amount (deliberately — I made sure it appears nowhere), your aunt's name, or anything about the Tennessee property beyond its existence.

The questions (yes, even for you)

1. Every number: $103K cash, ~$70K reno, ~$30K furniture, $240K appraisal, $150K in two years, $10,195 best month, 4.95 stars across 70+ stays — all exactly right?
2. OK that the book tells the contractor story honestly, including that we finished the house ourselves?
3. OK mentioning the purchase was in partnership with your aunt, and that the refi repaid her? (She's never named. If she'd rather not be referenced at all, I'll rephrase it.)
4. OK with your tax story at the level shown — W2 job, material participation, cost seg — nothing more specific?
5. OK mentioning the second property in Tennessee exists?
6. May I keep telling your story the same way in marketing — posts, podcasts, the Amazon page?
7. Anything you want changed, softened, or cut?

If you're good with all of it

Your deal convinced our family the math was real. Your story is going to convince a lot of strangers too. Thank you for letting me tell it.
